I went to watch the high school production, "Brighton Beach Memoirs" on Thursday 22nd of April. It was about a family living during the World War II. The play was about the family getting to understand each other. In the beginning, everyone had their own problems to deal with and that was all they cared about. They had conflicts and they had individual problems. However, in the end, the family becomes closer and happier. It was a very interesting play and it was very funny. I laughed so much during the play and I was really pulled into the whole story. The Actors' performance was great and they really did a good job bringing all these characters out. Furthermore, the set design was very cosy and well set. There were some perverted jokes such as Himalaya Mountains but I don't think it went too far so it wasn't unpleasant, but it expressed a lot about going through puberty through Eugene. Also, I could really relate to Nora, wanting to pursue her dreams but is annoyed at the fact her family thinks differently from her. It was really touching when everything fell into the place in the end as well. This was my first time watching a drama production in this school and it was very good. I think watching this play was an unforgettable experience for me and I would love to go to watch the next production too.
